International Trade and Valuation

1

Traded Internationally

As the Krugerrand is so easily and well recognised, buying and selling Krugerrands internationally is simple and straightforward. They can be bought from and sold to thousands of coin dealers, banks and their branches worldwide. This also makes them an investment with high liquidity.

2

Traded For Gold Content

Unlike collector coins, where value is determined by their rarity and condition, Krugerrands are valued for their gold content and carry a small premium as a result.

Easily Determined Value

At any time, the value of a Krugerrand can easily be determined based on the given gold price in troy ounces. The various denominations further facilitate making the calculations as they are exact amounts.

Legal Tender and Durability

Minted by the South African mint, Krugerrands have always been legal tender coins under South African legislation. This means, that unlike many cast or minted gold bars, they don't need to be assayed or melted down on resale. With a gold purity of 22 carats, Krugerrands are hard enough to resist normal scratching and denting. This enhanced durability and strength further help retain their value and tradability, unlike 24 carat bars and coins that are easily damaged and require protective packaging.

Portability and Manufacturing

Krugerrands are easy to transport and store, thanks to their weight and dimensions. By law the South African Mint Company is the only company allowed to manufacture South African legal tender coins such as the Krugerrand. All the gold used to manufacture the coins is supplied by Rand Refinery, who has been appointed the sole supplier of bullion Krugerrands to primary distributors both locally and internationally.
